The Maleku Indigenous Community is one of the 24 different indigenous territories in Costa Rica. The people are also known as Guatusos, though they themselves prefer Maleku, which means "Indian in love."

Kiré, which means "light" in Maleku, is inspired by the local population as part of the identity of Koora, raising the standards of its artisanal products to the maximum. It also draws international inspiration, blending influences and ingredients from Costa Rican cuisine. Kiré offers three meals a day, ranging from the most traditional dishes to vegan and vegetarian alternatives.

The menu offerings at Kiré also carry a commitment to the community, where local producers work sustainably to preserve natural resources.

In addition, its bar area offers a more casual side of Kiré, along with unique signature cocktails to enjoy at any time of the day.
